Be in new house.

Have to Piss

Get up walk to bathroom.

Have living room upstairs and walk in there and look out towards the window.

Huge 4 by 4 red transparent orb with demons trying to come out of it I scream loud and run down stairs.

Grab my dad's 45. And run back up stairs putting the clip in and see no orb.

Dad runs behind me and tackles me and says wtf why do you have my 45. Sister walks out of room crying because she says their was a man in her room.

Dad goes in with 45. Says son grab the 12 gauge, it's loaded and cocked.

I grab it. Run up stairs. Doors closed. Dad screams and shoots 4 rounds into darkness.

I open door. Say dad are you okay. And he says shoot!

I shoot once and a second later the window breaks and my dog yelps and barks repeatedly.

I say what happened. Dad is bleeding like crazy.

Run outside. There's no one there.

- >Feel an odd importance coming from ajar basement door.
- >Open it up, stairwell with shelves on the right, board games and vinyls.
- >On top, pink book. Can't remember title. All about hexes, rituals, softcover. Howto's with chants and everything. From simple to extensive.
- >Find bottles with numbered labels and odd powder in them, some like splintered granules. Also one bottle with three tiny animal skulls with no teeth or lower jaw
- >Theheck.jpg
- >Little sister comes to check on me, sees me sitting on stair with bottles, show her book and where I found it. All in easy access to the door.

>She takes book, and we move down to pool table. She finds book has some scary rituals, things involving sickness, and failure to heal.

>Stupid kids. Find one for luck, just to try. Has a chant and she did something with water. We try it, get dice out of monopoly. Has me call a number as she rolls, and rolls the number each time.

>Die goes flying off table off one roll, ricochets somewhere by furnace, gone...

>We're both pale.

>Hide the book in monopoly, say nothing

We spend the night in the house comforting grandma, but we share glances to the basement...

Next morning, before sun rises we're both up. We talk about it and decide to go back down.

>Holy... , basement is torn to shreds. Like someone turned it inside out.

>Broken vinyls, laundry all over, old childhood toys taken out of boxes, boxes stacked on pool table. Find broken glass on cement and only trace of anything is what I thought was a broken piece of one of the skulls.

>Every board game except monopoly and hi ho cherrio is in pieces (only two left in house now), cardboard flattened.

>We open monopoly, book is gone.

>nope out of there, poker face everyone, say nothing about mess.

Next time we're visiting, we talk to my brother and his girlfriend down there. His girlfriend finds it all exciting, but the three grandkids are just grim. My brother lays accusation about grandmother, nothing but suspicion.

But, the basement was just wrecked. And no one ever asked us what happened down there, or commented on it whatsoever.

I've thought long and hard about it, and I keep thinking it was a dream. Yet my little sister remembers it, every detail. My brother remembers us asking about it. And still the only two games in the house are those two.

I honestly don't know what to think.

A friend who is into the paranormal, conspiracies and all that told me that 333 was a rank of the Illuminati. He's not crazy, I trust him.

But you have to understand me here - I see 3:33 EVERYWHERE.
It's not a coincidence.

I open up my media player. What time is the song at? 3:33.

I glanced at my stereo. The song's time is 3:33.

I randomly decide to check the time on my computer, so I alt-tab and look in the corner of my desktop. 3:33.

I'm playing a video game and firing a rapid machine gun, in which the ammo count is going down very fast. I see 333 as it's going down.

It's not even a coincidence anymore. Those are just a few examples from the past week, I could name a lot more.

A little back story. I live in Australia where nearly every animal, spider, snake, insect wants to make you die in some painful way. So basically always on guard where I live. This happened about a week ago

- >Move bed against door then hear sister scream and cackling from something else
- >Everything goes very silent I can faintly hear trees outside
- >Laughing erupts even louder I freak and open my windows and get outside and run to neighbors house about 200m down the road
- >He grabs his gun and we come back
- >my sister is in tears in her room and my dad is no where to be found.
- >Sweat sunlight finally arrives and dad arrives home
- >He needed to get some stuff and his car broke down
- >we tell him what happened he goes white and doesn't say anything
- >Hour later some crazy religious chick rocks up doing some stuff to apparently get rid of this demon
- >I haven't seen it since or experienced the feeling of it's presence since.
- >I have never been so scared

I have a few other stories from my old house when we lived in a area that wasn't as remote that are creep too.

>my TV starts turning on and off on it's own.
>creepy as, but I just ignore it, we got the TV used, maybe it's busted.
>this continues for a year.
>be asleep one night, the TV turns on, and goes FULL VOLUME by itself, on some scary local TV show (I never ever watched local television before on that TV) >finally sick of it, I go "YOU KNOW WHAT, YOU CAN HAUNT THE HOUSE AND HAVE MY TV, JUST LET ME SLEEP!"
>TV turns off right as my rant finishes.
>amazed, I go back to bed.

I was never cross with the TV again, I always asked politely, and it usually turned off, except when King of the Hill was on.
Whatever It was, It liked King of the Hill. I kept that TV, and it still turned on and off on it's own, and it still turned off when I asked it nicely.

Then last year, it stopped. Whatever It was, I hope It moved on

Friends and I get bored
We start to play with a Ouija Board
Friend blacks out
We make sure he is ok, get him to sit back up
He locks eyes with me, won't look away
Grips my leg like a vice Crawl outside army style and lays in the rain
Gasping for air and grabbing at nothing
Get him to snap out of it
He remembers none of it

I don't wanna greentext. I remember one time me and my homies were walking around my suburban town, just being thugs when all of a sudden we see our really old friend no one has seen for a while.

Basically we just chatted all night, you know caught up and stuff. I told him to call me the next day, blah blah blah. He never called so I tracked down his number like magnum pi( Facebook) and called him.

He Acted all surprised when I answered, and said that he hadn't heard from me for years. I told him about the night before and he said that it has happened to other old friends of his. Needless to say, I was pretty spooked after that.

At high school on retreat I attended a Catholic School so where we where staying was a an old priest hom, and we were sleeping in a bunkhouse. The bunk house burnt down killing 7 priests back in the 50's, the priest running the retreat told us, and the wing I was sleeping in 5 of the 7 were trapped and burnt alive.

I awoke to a bright light shining in my eyes, then the light took the shape of a man. It was one of the priests (I looked at the plaque when we were told about it) standing with his arm out looking up. He was surrounded by a bright yellow light, then he disappeared.

I thought it could have been a teacher shining a torch in my eyes, but none were awake and I would have seen them come in, so then I thought I dreamt it but, I was wide awake and positive I saw it. In the morning I checked the plaque once again and the man I saw was the one on the plaque.

I feel stuff fairly often, and on rare occasions, see stuff. Not so much in the past 3 yearsish. Mostly, it's just feeling though, so nothing specific and I avoid it like the devil. I have on a few occasions had dreams that came partly true.

What's weird is they don't 100% happen like in the dream, but it's enough that it scares me.

The most specific time is when I was 10ish, it was Thanksgiving morning and my mom came in to get clothes and I told her I had a really vivid dream (I don't normally remember my dreams) that we went to my great aunt's house, only it was a different house, and that my other aunt was in front of the house raking a bunch of leaves and there were tons of leaves around the cars.

When we actually went to the house, which we'd never been to before and no one told me she had moved, and my aunt was in front of the house leaning against the car (instead of raking leaves) and there was a ton of leaves.

Posted in another thread a few days ago, but I saw the same green smoke/gas "entity" after gasping for air after having sleep paralysis, and before waking up had an outer body experience nightmare where I was watching myself sleep, only to feel its presence and try to scare it off by threatening I'll catch it, which I then forced myself to wake up and concentrate my vision into where I felt it. It faded away into darkness after I got a good look at it.

I have no idea what it was, it didn't make a sound, but my instincts were afraid of it.

Before I can tell my story, I should explain something :

The frame of my bed is made of two parts. Two single-bed frames that can be screwed together to form a double-bed. In such a configuration, you'll have on "leg" at each corner + two in the middle, on the line that joins the two halves of the frame.

So, to the story :

- >never hear anything like it again.

I would relate it to the dirtiest filthstep glitch music imaginable, but this way over 20 years ago, before anything like that was around that I know about and it came from nowhere and just stopped suddenly, so I wouldn't think it was any kind of music. And there was the impending feeling of dread that came through me as well.

Maybe someone can help me understand this dream I had that has stuck with me the past couple months.

in the dream it was me, my cousin and my friend outside of a bunker during the day about to break and enter. no one else was there in the whole base, completely deserted. so were talking and mapping out what were gonna do when a tall man walks up and starts taking pictures of us. creepy looking guy in a dirty fishing outfit. we all look at him like 'wtf are you doing here' and he snaps some pictures of us and walks away. like he was trolling my dream.

The only thing I remember after that was running up to the bunker and waking up.

Here's the screwed up part. that morning I'm driving to an interview in a town ive never been in. using my gps, I'm traveling down some main road through a farm town. I pass a small pond and the same guy, same outfit , look and height( minus a few small details) is staring at me as I drive by. creeped out I speed up staring straight ahead and not looking back. I know I havent seen this guy before so how can I picture someone I've never met then physically see him?

I was in my grandmas house just watching tv like the innocent little 11 year old I was. I was already kind of nervous being home alone but whatever. Out of nowhere, the tv changes a channel.

Then again.

And again.

It just kept a steady rhythm of going up in channels. Start semi freaking out, but then just I just thought that I must be laying on the remote.

Then I really started freaking out when I stood up OFF OF THE BED and the tv kept doing it!

After standing there, motionless I conjured up the courage to switch the channel myself and after that it just stopped. Since I had never experienced something like that before, I was absolutely terrified.

- >They didn't
- >I get chills and go back inside

We dismissed it as unexplained and figured it didn't matter. He'd only closed our door after all. Later, our window broke from that door slamming, so the fact that our window didn't shake was another testament to the fact that someone closed the door.

Was more startled than scared, but crept out nonetheless.

For those who are curious: He was a bit taller than 6'3", very blonde with loose cropped hair, wearing light colored jean shorts with white sneakers and a silvery-white t-shirt. I hadn't seen him long enough or been able to look directly at him, but I was startled enough to remember what I had seen.

Head over to buddies house after work on Friday for the weekend. His families gone and he don't wanna be alone in the house, it's three floors no basement, kinda old, high creepiness potential.

Guest bathroom connects to guest bedroom on the bottom floor. We're on the second floor playing video games like the shutins we are and I pause to take a piss.

Don't turn on bedroom light leave bathroom door open cause zero chance anyone's walking in. Glance at mirror next to toilet that points back at the bedroom. Waist high shadow girl standing there before the door quickly and silently closes. Doors are not silent in this house. I yell for Brosef to turn on the room light before I leave the bathroom and nope out of there.

We stayed at my place that weekend. I've seen that girl three times before in two other places. my place and his old place, and always while he's in the house too.

>look at gf, she gives me that "what?" look, so she's definitely not seeing it >decide not to mention it since she's scared of the paranormal >when we reach a point where I could start to make up his face, he jumps into the bushes >by the time we reach the top, I look to the side, the bushes seemed stomped, like someone just passed through them >silentnope.jpg

>gf and 2 other guys didn't see a thing

Can't figure out dafuq that was to this day.

And this last one happened to my gf, not me >again with the 2006 BS, oh what a year >parents say we have to sleep on separate rooms, gf stayed in my room, and me in my sister's (older sister, was studying abroad)

>gf can't sleep, gets up to go to my sister's room

>when she opens the door, she sees a man standing right in front of her >she thinks it's probably my dad, there to say something to me (we decided to switch rooms after my parents were asleep), but when she flicks the light switch, there's nothing.

>she nopes to my sister's room

This last one had something positive to it, though. It was the little push we needed to sleep in the same bed for the first time, I faced my parents the other day, everything went back to expected, etc, I digress again

And that's all I've got folks, lurkan for moar now.

Last night at 3 am, just as I was laying down in bed, I could clearly hear somebody on my roof.

Only I'm on the second floor, and they would have to have a ladder or climbed onto the roof from my window inside my bedroom. We don't have a ladder.

I'm 100% sure it wasn't an animal, steps were way too heavy, and whoever it was sounded like they had boots on.

I immediately got up and closed my windows and curtains.

- >Eventually Jacob (assuming it's him) has walked up the entire staircase
- >It enters her room, temperature drops, mom is awake, but pretends to be asleep
- >Feel something cold moving it's hand over her
- >Mom runs out of house
- >Look back
- >Inside her bedroom window is nothing but a bright, red glow

Pic related, it's the house. We were in the area a couple of years ago, and I took a picture of it. Because my mom is dumb, she never got a good look at Jacob when it entered her room or when she ran out, nor has she ever contacted whoever lives in the house today to see if they have experienced anything similar. I don't think she has made it up though, she's not the kind that makes up stories to scare people.

I would like to begin by saying that I had not experienced anything "paranormal" prior to this event, or after. I'm still not completely sure what happened.

- >Be 21 at the time.

- >My friend and I decide to hunt on his grandfather's property.
- >Had been scouting the area for most of the late summer/early fall.

- >"Nah, that's alright boys I'll have breakfast ready for you when you get back. Just be sure of what you're shooting at out there."
- >Okay old timer. This ain't my first rodeo.
- >Morning comes and I'm in my stand by about 4:45-5:00AM.
- >Stand is set up in a tree line overlooking a field to my left, and down a hollow to my right.
- >Friend's stand is directly to my 12 o'clock about 700 yards out through the woods.
- >His location basically overlooks the rest of the field and not much else.
- >It's not a full moon, but it's close. Morning is crisp and clear. After my eyes adjust you can basically see as good as daylight.
- >Not there long, probably 15-30 mins. Don't even have my rifle loaded yet.
- >Check field. See a figure about 200 yards out walking across the field.
- >Hmm...make sure gun isn't loaded, open the bolt and pull scope up to glass this thing.
- >This thing is just walking at along, but it has no defined edges. The entire outline kind of just fades into thin air. Never seen anything like this before.
- >There is one tree in the middle of this field.
- >It walks to the tree. Stands there just looking at it for about 10 seconds. Then just turns around and heads back the way it came.
- >Quietly whisper to myself, "What the hell?"

>It stops like it just walked into a brick wall and squares up to me like it's looking directly at me.

>I still can't see what this thing looks like, facial details, clothing, nothing. Just a black being.

>Take my eye away from the lens and look over the rifle to make sure I'm not just seeing anything due to my eyes adjusting to the sights.

>Nothing there.

>Put scope back up to same location I had seen it when it stopped.

>Nothing there.

>I'm a little uneasy at this point.

>But then I get cold. This isn't the typical I've been sitting in a tree and my hands and feet are starting to get cold. It's my entire body is freezing.

>I hear something in the woods directly behind me crash/snap and my tree begins to sway back and forth.

>There was no wind. None of the trees directly next to me were swaying, their leaves weren't moving, they were just perfectly still.

>Now my tree is rocking so much I'm getting concerned that it might break. I have been hunting for over 13 years and have never had that concern in any weather.

>I finally just blurt out, "What the hell is going on?!"

>Everything stops.

>It's just now starting to get more light out so I look around and get down the tree and just leave my climber stand attached.

>Nope out back to his grandfather's place by about 6:15-6:30AM.

>Friend comes back around 10:30AM.

>Asks if I saw anything.

>No.

>"Really? I thought I saw something walking around by that tree in the field near you. Then I lost it and heard a bunch of commotion coming from your way."

>We both just sit there looking at each other. Apparently he can see that I'm a little shaken.

>During breakfast we ask his grandfather why that tree is still there in the middle of the field.

>"Well the property owner before me said it was in the deed when he bought the property that the tree was to remain so he left it there and suggested I do the same. Apparently there had been some pretty awful thing done to some people at that tree during the civil war."

I'm still not sure what happened, but it was nothing I've ever come close to experienced since.

- >get up and run downstairs immediately to be with other family members
- >tell them what happened, they remind me of my mother's stories of old George and that I may have seen my own ghost.

I always had the feeling I was being watched and this was intensified in certain areas of the room. I still tear up a little bit remembering it out of fear. I don't get that same feeling now that I have my own apartment. It's nice feeling safe in my shower.

[329]

I have a couple of short stories/things that have happened.

- >My mom be drying cloths in back yard on the line.
- >mom is religious and superstitious, so take story how ever you want
- >Mom gets weird feeling
- >She sees a crow on fence just staring at her
- >2spooky4mom
- >She does the sign of the cross
- >Crow flys off and takes shape of a human mid-air

More personal stories that are probably the result of Sleep paralysis but still NOPE for me.

- >Be in middle school and share room with brother
- >Dresser with mirror sits at the end of the room
- >wake up in the middle of the night
- >can't move
- >see reflection of grotesque looking woman in the mirror staring at me
- >nope.jpg
- >close eyes and she is gone

- >Be the same age and still share room with brother
- >Wake up in the middle of the night again
- >look at my brother
- >I see a human shaped figure sitting indian style floating above him
- >fades away

That house did have some weird stuff going on, at least I think.
Here is one more I remember

- >still in middle school
- >average Thursday night, everyone home
- >early evening but still dark
- >just before dinner time

- >the whole family hears banging on all sides of the house
- >must be some jerks playing a joke
- >dad and mother run outside
- >dad through front door and mother through back door
- >nobody there
- >banging gradually stops
- >nope nope nope
- >mom pours holy water around the house
- >never happens again

- >Manage to open door
- >Sprint out of house at mach one
- >Tell parents, of course they don't believe me
- >They lock up and we go
- >Major sense of relief after leaving that house for good

No idea why I was so stupid to go inside and challenge anything in there, or why I was so frightened of some doors slamming. I could have simply locked the door and never had to experience this.

Sucks for whoever is living there now.

- >chills, heartbeat going nuts, not moving
- >try to convince myself I'm imagining things
- >say out loud, "there's nothing in here"
- >CLEAR AS DAY, hear someone say "I'm here"
- >kind of high pitch, almost teasing tone
- >sit up and turn my lamp on prepared to attack intruder with frantic slaps and girly screams
- >see nothing

- >Be maybe 7 or 8

Just some background, Weird things happened in that house since we moved in, when I was 3. Things have been moved out of there place, unexplained sounds, and sometimes it sounded like there was a dog in my room at night.

- >Hear a thumping, like clumsy, heavy footsteps
- >turn off sound on TV to listen
- >Run to my mom in the kitchen
- >Tell her I was hearing the sounds
- >She walks in and listens to the sounds for a good 5 minutes

I live in a really small town, so that one is the only street that goes in the center. Sometimes I can still feel "something", while walking there.

Another one:

- >be 8 months ago
- >be in another city, for uni
- >sleeping in a room with to beds, but still alone.
- >one day I notice this strange luminous thing turning around the other bed
- >it was like a ring of light, black inside, big almost like a soccer ball.

- >this thing is back again and is "staring" at me
- >it starts to float around the room
- >NOPE.wav, turn around and pretend to sleep.

This goes on for a week or two, then I started to see this ring floating around even during the day, staring at me.

- >one night, I came back at 11pm from a party

- >headache it's stronger now
- >see this ring standing towards me
- >throw that little statue down the window

- >hear something like a little baby crying
- >pass out

I changed room 2 days later.

Last one I remember:

[357]

Little story of my own (Not going to bother green texting.)

The house I grew up in my family moved in to when I was only a year old, and the woman who lived there previously lived there alone for sixty years. The house was sold to us by her nephew. She passed away in the hospital (My mother says her name was anne.) We joke about it for a while "The ghost in the attic" or "ooh, spooky, house is haunted."

It got creepy when I turned 15, My mom converted the back bedroom in to an office, this is the room Anne would have lived in. My mom kept this creepy, 3 foot tall, plastic doll there. You know the ones. The ones from your nightmares. Creepy stare, everyone in my house joked it was evil. Dolls, man. Don't trust the friggin' dolls.

Out of the blue, we would wake up in the morning to find every light on, and the doll moved to the center of the office. Next time it happens, the doll is in the hallway, outside our bathroom. After that, it was on its back, laying on the floor at the top of our stairs, facing the front of the house. This little thing was on the move. My mother was so terrified and couldn't sleep that she just got rid of it one day, out of the blue.

I still want to know what that thing was doing. NEVER TRUST THE DOLLS, MAN.

>ages 6-14
>I get left home alone a lot >most nights I'm left alone the lights in the downstairs of my house dont work for no apparent reason >sometimes none of of the upstairs lights near the downstairs hallway (in the kitchen) dont work and I had to cower by a lamp in the living room

>terrified every time this happens >sometimes my mom would come home at night and the lights

>ALWAYS worked for her

The way this place was you could sit in the farthest part of the living room and see through the kitchen, and down this creepy stairway/hall. The front door was upstairs in the living room (place was weird.)

Another experience I had there:

>be 11

>sister moves out so I take her room (hers was in a better part of the house)

>been sleeping in there for a few weeks

>one night I turn out the lights and lay down to go to sleep

>on the verge of consciousness, just about to fall asleep

>I sense this... person walk up to my bed

>I'm about to fall asleep

>this girl my height lays down into me

>HOLYMOTHEROFWHAT

>INSTANTLY AWAKE

>sprint to bedroom door

>slam door open and sprint down the creepy hallway >light doesn't turn on

>I'm whimpering as I keep going at a full sprint (I've gone like 20 feet by now)

>rip open my mom's bedroom door, slam and lock it behind me >jump in bed with her and shiver, terrified

I didn't go back in there for a week, and didn't sleep in my room for a month.

One more thing that happend to me quite a few times there- our kitchen bar was right at the top of the creepy hallway stairs (there were 13 of the things) and sometimes when it was home alone at night I would glance down the stairs as I went by, and sometimes... sometimes there would be the figure of a man, but he seemed like he was made from shadows if you know what I mean, and every time I saw this I would freeze, and he would move slowly towards me.

Every time this happened, I booked it outside in the middle of the night and went over to my friend's house to go egg cars or something.

- >live in apartment alone with my cat
- >cat always go in crawling space behind the kitchen cupboards

I don't exactly know how to explain this. In the cupboard where I put the trash bin, if I remove the wooden plank at the far end of the cupboard, I can see that the kitchen's wall is a little further, and it forms a kind of crawling space that extends along the walls of the kitchen behind all the cupboards. My cat goes in that space between the back of the cupboards and the wall. He can only get there from the cupboard where the trash bin is because it's the only cupboard that isn't closed at the back. Not sure if it makes sense, but anyway.

- >cat always go there when he doesn't want to be bothered or when people come over
- >He'll just open the cupboard (because it's just closed with weak magnets) and get in the crawling space behind, pretty far and usually out of sight.
- >One day watching TV
- >suddenly hear cupboard opening
- >get mad because I don't like him going there because he gathers dust there and gets the couch dirty afterwards >at the far end of the crawling space, two glowing eyes looking at me.

>NOPE.jpg

>close cupboard and go back to living room,

>Never happened again

Btw, I live in a city and that crawling space doesn't lead to the outside or anything, I don't know wtf that was or if it's still in there but I didn't see or hear anything weird after that.

>start to think I hear voices down the back hall where parents bedroom was >brush it off

>minutes later, I hear a quick, loud yell as if someone was angry and shouted >turn tv down and begin to hear what sounded like at least three men yelling at each other

>only, they were not speaking English

It sounded to me like cavemen, no joke. The way they spoke was all nasal and some annunciation using their throat which sounded more hollow than anything else. I sat in terror for what seemed like an eternity, but it only lasted around ten seconds. The conversation slowly faded away, as if they were walking away from where they were standing down the hall. That house was new but it had such a dark feeling to it. The land did too.

We actually went out into what is now the state owned land, which is ALL forest land, and we found old rock walls and trees that were grown purposely in uniform patterns to form a cove. The trees had been there for a long, long time because they were all dead. It was just this set of trees out in the middle of the pines. Our whole land was like that.

>"What are you laughing about?"

>explain

>walk into room

>as soon as we are both in there, happens again, right on queue

Being a non-believer at the time of paranormal things, I tried everyway to debunk what happend. The remote wasn't on the floor, and power couldn't be an option (when a TV becomes unplugged or loses power, it doesn't turn back on when it gains power). After this happened, I started believing in paranormal things and stopped joking around about it. Seriously a life changing experience.

The house was knocked down the following year to make way for a unit complex, and interestingly enough, one day when I was 14 a little girl was walking through the electronic gate, when it all of a sudden closed on her, trapping her.

I witnessed the whole thing out of pure coincidence and had to go over and help the girl.

The gate was built right under where the window was. Maybe it picked that exact moment to tell us it's still there.

- >There's indents in the snow, like someone walked on it approximately an hour or two ago, and the snow covered it up.

Also, in that second story, when I went to check on the garage (which I didn't think of doing before I watched the movie the first time) The garage was opened with at least 2-4 inches of snow covering the floor. My paranoia that night knew no bounds.

My mum's quite sensitive about her religion, considering she's the only woman in a family of five. She doesn't really like people taking the piss out of ghosts and stuff like that, so I know she wouldn't have made this up. I swear when she came home, her face was as white as a sheet.

>"Theres no place like home... theres no place like home"
>We all tumbled over each other trying to get out of that attic.

I know... purely coincidental... but it scared the crap out of us considering the whole feeling of foreboding in that house. This was over 15 years ago, but as we grew up my best buddy always complained of weird stuff in that house...

Around 10 or 12 years old, live near the edge of town, occasionally ride my bike down to this big old sewer drain that spills out into a small wetland/marsh. I liked to go down to that area a lot because theres frogs, turtles, etc and the railroad tracks were just over the hill.

One day I went down there and just stood on top of the drain pipe, it's easily wide/tall enough for people to walk into. Just staring off the edge, enjoying nature for a good 15 minutes or so.

Suddenly hear "What are you doing here?!" echo out of the pipe in some weird sounding voice. Wait, frozen with fear, start hearing sloshing noises in the water from up inside the pipe. NOPE.

I flipped out and ran at my bike, racked myself on the seat I was so panicked, didn't even care, got to the street and broke the bike chain, jumped off running down the street dragging my bike.

- >a few buddies and I drive up to MPLS to hang out with some people
- >few people decide we should go to Grey Cloud Island(bonus points if you know this place)
- >place used to be a KKK camp, signs with "Will shoot on sight" everywhere

We had heard a story about the daughter of one of the Klansmen a little bit earlier. Apparently she had brought a black boyfriend home, so the boyfriend was shot, and the girl was burned and thrown in a trash bag.

- >decide to park under the railroad-bridge

- >keep walking because we can sacrifice the one Mexican with us
- >a shadow steps out of the trees
- >shine a light at it
- >a void of black, darkness, emptiness
- >we all high-tail back to the car, drop the guys off right away and the 3 of us head back to Rochester

Now, Rochester is a decent sized city, but there's a lot of woods in the SW and NE sides of town. We've seen 'thunderbirds', wendigos, and some other crazy stuff but nothing we could prove outright. Anyways, I was watching my grandparents house and it was pretty big, so we all hung out in the living room that was connected to the kitchen, which had a small door to the dining room.

The backyard was about 100x50 yards and the living room window let us see half of it.

- >chilling on the couch that same night
- >let the dog out and start to relax
- >1 hour later, see something moving around yard
- >forgot dog was out so we assumed cougar, because it looked pretty big
- >go outside with re-bar
- >dog comes running upstairs and we all crap ourselves
- >30 minutes later we see something in the yard again
- >smaller, crawling
- >yeaaahhh nope
- >close the blinds and continue watching movies

Now, the way I was sitting on the couch, if I barely looked left the entire kitchen and diningroom doorway was visible.

Alright so it's coincidentally 3:00am when all the crazy stuff starts to happen.

- >start hearing creaking from upstairs
- >weird because house is new and solid
- >glance over at kitchen because that's the general area of the noises
- >the doorway in the kitchen is impossibly black
- >the darkness looks like its seeping onto the walls in the kitchen
- >entire back end of kitchen starts to fade away

I'm tearing up typing this, it filled me with uncontrollable dread and still terrifies to think about it.

- >everyone notices eventually
- >they start suggesting that we just ignore it and maybe we're just tired
- >go to check front door cause we're about to pass out
- >it's open
- >specifically remember locking it
- >bathroom adjacent to front door has a mirror that shows whoever is at the door
- >mirror looks distorted so I focus on it to try and straighten myself out
- >the second my eyes adjust there is a smoking, burnt girl in a white gown crawling up my leg
- >look down and see my shirt tighten like somebody is wrapping their arms around me
- >flail and try to run back to kitchen
- >friends are standing there
- >they say I was in the landing-way for 15minutes
- >felt like 30 seconds
- >tell them what happened and they start to eye me
- >we're all sitting down and they're watching me close
- >try to get up but I can't move my arms or legs
- >tell them and they look at me like I'm possessed
- >say my face looks different
- >start to smell sulfur
- >black out for a while
- >come to smoking a cig on the back porch with friend
- >says he almost killed me with a crowbar

Apparently all the lights turned off and then back on, along with the TV, and I was standing up then. I continued on to walk from room to room in the house talking about how it all felt so weird and ended up sitting in the basement for a while just jerking my head around.

They got scared and were holding anything solid they could find.

Heard rhythmic tapping in my stove, kitchen, and trunk of my car for almost a year after that.

- >Bed in one of the corner

>The breathing in the corner stops when I near it

>Suddenly, out of nowhere, I hear somebody run up the basement stairs

>I turn around while I still hear the running

>It's the kind of stairs where there isn't a back to each step and you can see people through them

>Nobody there

>NOPE

This happened monthly for 2 years. I have more basement stories that are almost as bad if not worse than this if you're interested.

[We're always interested.]

>Be 16 still

>Average Saturday night browsing the internet

>My desk was against the wall with my back to the stairs, but not directly in front of the stairs

>I have a small shelf behind the stairs against the opposite wall

>Browsing, browsing, browsing...

>Suddenly, something on the shelf starts rattling

>I turn around and I can actually SEE an empty bowl that was sitting on it moving a little bit

>Nothing else is moving in the room

>Get closer slowly and cautiously

>Parents knock on the basement door

>Jump out of my skin

>The rattling stops

>"Anon, take your laundry out of the dryer!"

>"One sec."

>Casually think to myself that it was creepy, but it could have been a rattling pipe in the wall or something

>Turn around

>See a 3 foot tall black shadow figure standing two feet in front of me

>It darts almost instantly to the left and I can literally see legs coming from it

>It disintegrates when it reaches the corner where I heard the breathing

>This all happened in 3 seconds

>NOPE NOPE NOPE

>Sleep upstairs on the couch that night

What scared me most was how fast the shadow moved. It was really, REALLY fast. Still have a few more stories.

I hated that basement, if it wasn't for the size, I would have stuck to the attic. The attic was a good bit smaller and I lived up there from age 4-15. The only plus side was the lack of creepiness/activity.

Anyways...

>Be 17 now, I believe

>Night after Junior Prom

>Had some friends over for an after party, but they had left by now

>Approximately 4:30 AM

>Clean up the basement, throw out all the trash, etc.

>About 5:00 AM by the time I'm done

>Sneak quietly upstairs to brush my teeth

>All is quiet

>Take care of business in the bathroom

>Come back downstairs

>"What the..."

>I literally said this out loud at what I saw

>Scared silent

>My entire. Freaking. Mattress... Was in BEHIND the stairs.

>My bed had no frame, so it would be fairly easy to move, but not on it's own

>I looked around for any friends that stuck around to prank me

>Nobody

>Hesitant to go to bed, but too tired to care

- >Look at the clock
- >About 5:15 AM when I start to drift in sleep
- >Pass out in 5 minutes, but with the feeling that somebody was still there

The next morning...

- >Move my mattress back as soon as I get up
- >Go to my desk
- >Stare in confusion at my alarm clock, which was now upside-down.
- >Kind of unsettled because I remember looking at the clock rightside up before I fell asleep

This is when I seriously wanted to go back to the attic.

Well, I have one more NOPE post and a few small creepy details about the basement in general.

- >Be 18, winter of senior year in high school
- >Early January, if I recall
- >Alone in the basement
- >Browsing /ck/ or something because I was hungry and too lazy to get food upstairs
- >Something pulls on my chair
- >My chair isn't an office chair, it's more like a wooden chair you'd see in a library
- >The chair was just tall enough so that just the tip of my feet touch the floor
- >Disregard the slightly creepy incident that happened and continue browsing/typing
- >Suddenly, out of nowhere, I get the feeling that somebody is watching me from that one back corner again
- >Too scared to turn around, so I keep browsing
- >The fear gets more and more intense, like somebody is getting closer to me
- >I swear somebody was going to touch my shoulder or something
- >Turn around after 15 minutes of this
- >Nothing

- >Turn back my mouse pad is half hanging off of my desk
- >It was under my hand and I didn't feel it move
- >NOPE
- >That's enough for one night

Didn't even know something like that could happen. Some other things that happened which I think would be too boring to make into a separate post included occasional footsteps, more breathing, movement or disappearance of some things, and seeing that 3-foot shadow from the corner of my eye

Not sure if this is that bad but it actually happened to me a while back.

So every month or so I stay at my grandma's. This night was one of those nights. So everything is going as per norm. I stayed up until about 2:30 watching tv and my grandparents had gone to bed. So I'm watching tv and decide it's time to go to bed.

As I get up, I hear 4 knocks on the door. Think it's out next door neighbors who we are very close with. Go check the door. Open it and naught. Decide something fell or I'm imagining stuff. Go to bed.

There's a large swindle next to the bed. I've been in bed for about ten minutes when I smell something. It's hard to explain. Like a rusty metallic rotten meat smell. What is that? Get up to turn the light on and as I stand up and walk I hit something FREAKING SOLID, RIGHT IN THE MIDDLE OF THE ROOM.

Did Taekwondo for 6 years. Knee whatever it is as hard as I can where a stomach should be. Roll to the light in case it has a weapon. Turn on light. Nothing.

NOTHING.

Check all cupboards etc for animals maybe. Nothing. It was definately human height. Grabbed my grandpa's semi auto .22 and didn't sleep that night.

Don't know if this is that bad but I was freaking out when it happened.

- >head over to investigate
- >light is on and backdoor is open
- >look through house to see if someone broke in

It's highly unlikely that he did though. He has IOCD and he has to have everything a certain way before he can sleep. And I went out around 11:30 to grab a sandwich and the light was not on and I don't think the door was open. First time anything like this has happened so there is probably a logical explanation.

So I've been having these weird waking dreams lately, it seems to have started when I got my new chair.

- >my room consists of a desk, a wall mounted tv, a bed and a chair
- >the bed is at the far back of the room, my desk is next to it with my new chair in between.
- >when I'm sleeping I push my bed as close to my desk as a I can, with the chair still being between them
- >lately I've been waking up in the middle of the night
- >hearing tapping and breathing coming from my chair
- >when I look up at the chair I can clearly see someone is sitting in it
- >usually a female with dead eyes and gray skin
- >as my mind grasps what is going on, she melts into the chair and disappears

Imagine this happening every night for the last three months. I can't have the chair in my room anymore because if I wake up and look at the chair, I'll see her sitting in it... The only thing I can do is push the chair out of the room and close the door, if I don't close the door I can see her standing in the hallway.

This is probably just my mind adjusting to being awake by messing with reality, but it doesn't happen with anything else in my room. Not the paintings, not the image on the screen, just the chair.

It might seem like nonsense but this banging was loud, and I was nowhere near being asleep at this stage. If my dad was awake at the time he said he was, this would have been even louder for him, as his room was across the house and closer to the neighbours

Even if he wasn't awake it would be more likely than not that he would have woken up.

Still the freakiest thing that's happened to me that I can think of.

- >Normally I can hear most noises on the house next door but it's 3 AM and there are no women in that house. Why would they sing at this time?
- >Singing/humming stops
- >Nope.jpg
- >Put my earphones back on.
- >Fall asleep

It wasn't really a huge experience, but it was nopey. Has anybody had anything like this happen to them?

[508]

When I was about 12, as a favour, I took someone's dog for a walk along a secluded road that runs through some woodland.

Everywhere was covered in snow and there was not a sound to be heard, which naturally gives off that eerie kind of atmosphere that gives you the creeps. As I was about to turn off on to a footpath, which ran through the trees, the dog began to bark hysterically, as if he was seriously disturbed due to knowing something I didn't. I took the message that he didn't want me to go down there, so I immediately turned back.

On the way back up the road, I looked behind and I could just about make out the figure of a man standing by a tree on the footpath that I was planning to walk through. He was just standing there, looking at the floor. Creepiest thing I had ever seen.

[509]

I was about 11/12 and my younger brother and I were often scared and either him or myself would go to the other's room to sleep when we were spooked.

One night we heard the sound of a bus braking outside my window which was the front bedroom to the house and street. Thing was, we lived in a sub-division that buses never traveled to (they'd stop a few a blocks away and drop people off from school or wherever). We peaked through the curtains out the window and of course there was no bus there. So that scared the crap out of us. After a minute or two, we heard the sound of someone talking, like a woman and in some inaudible language and tone; we simply knew someone was outside and saying something. Within a couple of minutes we had finally built up the courage to look out the window and of course we saw nothing. After settling back into bed we heard this awful laugh like a witch's laugh. I about crapped my fruit of looms. We didn't dare look outside this time.

To this day I presume it was some joke a family member or neighbor was playing on us but considering the other odd stuff that went on in that house, and confirmed by other family members that had lived/stayed there, I'll never know if it was something else. But that house had some serious creepy stuff going on inside it.

[510]

You want chills down your spine...

My grandma always left the vanity mirror light on in the bathroom between my room and my brother's room in that house I previously mentioned. The light would always cast out into this rounded hallway that had an opening to the living room and dining room, so the entire rounded hallway was lighted at night. This also led to just enough light cast into each bedroom so that shadows would cast from the bedroom door and dresser on that side of the wall (which also had the closet just to the left of the open bedroom door).

I would see wolf ears behind my door almost every freaking night.

I won't be able to sleep tonight.

I have never heard anything like this, it changed and wasn't regular, it stopped after the 3rd time. I can't figure out where it came from. It creeps me out because on the connecting wall next to where my head is, there's this sealed off little door panel and I have no idea what is behind it.

I'm paranoid as it is and have been having nightmares about this little door due to my own over active imagination. This did NOT help my issue...

Coupled with the fact that we both witnessed our closet door unlatch itself and swing about 3 or 4 inches open a few nights ago with nothing but darkness beyond it. Not really wanting to go close my eyes in there right now. Not sure what to think about all of this, haven't had anything like this happen at this location until this week. Not saying 'ghosts' but definitely not normal.

My partner is psychotic by diagnosis. He's okay for the most part, and when he starts to see or hear (or sometimes smell) things he knows it's not real, but it freaks him out and he needs to be comforted until it stops.

There have been a few times where... well, it's been weird. There was a few months where he was in a fairly lenient facility (medication wasn't working as well as they wanted it to so they wanted to try him out on different things under observation, it was optional but he agreed to it) and I was allowed to stay with him overnight if they thought it was okay.

In the beginning he was in this room, and I was staying with him and I remember he was all jittery from this new treatment, it was around 3AM and he couldn't sleep and had to keep getting up and walking around. He saw someone in the room and told me, he looked absolutely terrified and I had to do the usual "it's okay, there's no one there" etc. to try and calm him down.

Then there was this noise, like someone was scratching on the walls or the door. It sounded too close to be something outside, so I figured it was someone in the next room, but then he said "she's trying to scratch through the door, her hands are so bloody". Of course I didn't say I could hear anything, because that wouldn't have helped it all, but it freaked me out a little.

There have been other times, like once we were staying in a B&B and he was hearing whispering, and I could hear it too. Once I think I may have seen something, too.

I don't know if this is brought to life due to natural circumstances, folie a deux, or - the more /x/ theory - it's not so much his psychosis as it is a sixth sense.

- >the shadows come together and form actual shapes

- >they start moving, it's like an old black and white short
- >the Micky's push Goofy down the well
- >they point and laugh silently before looking right at me
- >hide under my sheets until I fall asleep for the rest of the night

I realize how stupid that sounds and I'd write it off as just an overactive imagination of a 5 year old, but I there's so much about that house that make me question if it actually happened. From nightly nightmares to another creepy as stuff happening. To this day, I can't shake the feeling that the "show" was suppose to be something trying to entertain me.

This happened when I was maybe 12 years old. Only really creepy moment I've had.

- >be falling asleep
- >suddenly I'm really awake, alert and terrified and I don't know why
- >figure my cat made a sound that woke me up.
- >look at my door where I think I heard the sound
- >there's a weird golden light shining under my door

>the knob turns and the door slowly opens >looking into the hallway I can't see any of it's features (bannister, painting, other days, etc), just that weird golden glow >there's a thin handed attached to a squat/pudgy looking puce/brown creature with two big black glittering eyes peeking into the room and starring at me
>maybe 4-5 feet tall
>it stares at me for a moment, while I'm nearly pissing myself in fear >still have the thought it's was my cat making a noise that woke me up, and I manage to whisper out her name >next thing I know the light and creature are gone and I can see into the hallway again >next morning the door is still ajar (I sleep with it sealed shut)
and nobody says they came into my room last night

This happened about a week ago. Nothing too impressive, but definitely freaked me out.

>Sitting at home alone

>5 minutes after closing kitchen door, it swings open. Not the king of open like I didn't close it properly and it just kinda opened a bit, it actually FLEW open.

>About a minute later, I hear someone upstairs. Not like creaking floors, like someone is walking around.

I do not believe in "ghosts" or anything of that sort, but this really freaked me out and I cannot explain it logically.

I never did figure out whether the film was real or not, or why it would be in a drive-in theater. I can only assume that it was either a snuff film that someone was watching after the theater had closed, or one of those less-than-spectacular Italian horror films from the sixties.

There was this old condemned hospital in downtown Chicago that my friends and I would go into every now and then and try to experience something spooky. Can't remember the name of the place, it's been torn down now, but the most absolutely chilling thing that's ever happened to me took place as we were walking out of there.

I was kind of lagging behind to look at the graffiti plastered all over the walls when one of my lady friends let out the most shaken half scream/gasp I've ever heard in my life, I got that feeling... kind of like when you turn off the lights behind you and run up the stairs, so I booked it without looking behind me. They said there was a tall man with backwards, deformed legs standing behind me.

I was taking down some rubbish at night when I saw the face of a lady in the middle of two trees. Her hair was dark and long. She had no pupils. I cannot remember if she had a nose or mouth. Her entire head was surrounded by a bright light and not affected by any shadows.

I froze up for a minute or so then started sweating and feeling my heart beating like crazy. Her face was gone when I came back from the rubbish bins.

I spoke to my room mate later in the evening about it. He said that it was most likely just a trick of the mind. I'm not denying that the mind can do that to you but I felt seriously terrified.

I have checked the two trees a couple of times now at both day and night. There is a room with a window that lights up at night times but it is not directly behind the trees. The leaves are very thick or plentiful and I cannot see the light from the window through them.

Maybe I'm thinking too much into this and being paranoid.

I live in texas, about two weeks ago we experienced a much needed and very heavy series of storms. I have a Great Dane named Harley who is an all around tough guy until it comes to thunder.

One night while, I was home alone during the storm, I heard Harley gnawing at the trim of our front wooden door. I pulled the door open and it was pitch black but I could just barley make out the large animal breathing heavily in front of me. I yelled, "Harley no!"

I shut the door and started back towards the living room when I heard a noise at the back door I looked out the window and saw Harley anxiously pawing at the back door. To this day I have no clue what I saw on my front porch.

[585]

Not terrifying but I've never quite been able to explain this one. There was a mirror at the bottom of stairs in my parents house, which is slightly creepy if you get up in the middle of the night, as you'd imagine. To the left of it is a door to the laundry room and the downstairs toilet. This happened in late evening, when I was looking in the mirror, and in the reflection you can see the top of the stairs.

I see my Mam's bare feet at the top, turning and walking out of sight, presumably to her bedroom. Her show came on the TV, so I walked upstairs and called for her, only to find all the upstairs lights off and no Mam. I call for her again and hear my mother's voice, back downstairs in the toilet. No one else in the house that day.

>Friend won't budge on giving me a ride (We used the one truck during the move), and I decided against taking it to get myself home
>It's been a good few hours by now and my sleep deprived brain thought it'd be a great idea to just walk home for an hour or so
>This house is on the suburb outskirts, and surrounded by wooded areas and wide properties
>It's a full moon so I can see clear enough to know where I'm walking, things aren't so bad if only a little chilly.
>It's a good few minutes in and I'm switching between using my phone as a flashlight and passing the time
>I bump into someone with my shoulder on the sidewalk and apologize out of habit as I walk past
>It's then that I realize that I've been walking down an empty road and didn't see anyone coming my way (though I was probably too focused on the phone)

>I turn around just a few seconds later and wait for my eyes to adjust and the person was gone. The only place they could have gone was the opposite side of the road or an uphill field, both of which I would have easily noticed.

>I'm way more paranoid at this point, there's no cars and the only sounds are my footfalls and a couple of faint birds in the background

>The field next to me gradually flattens out and then sinks into a creek that flows under this road and goes into some woodland on the opposite side

>I'm trying to watch the creek and the woods at the same time, holding my phone as a weapon like an idiot because screw this I should have stayed at the house

>Approach the bridge and the guardrails make me feel a little safer so I shift attention to woods

>There's a figure walking in the opposite direction across the road

>Can't really make them out because I'm not wearing my glasses (forgot to take them out of my bag after I tried to sleep)

>He also stops

>Don't want to take my eyes off him so we just stand there staring each other down

>We searched for the keys to the room for a while but couldn't find them.

IDK how he can live in that place. We didn't get to visit his house since. Sometimes me and my friends joke around about the possibility of him keeping someone in that room against his will, all chained up. While I don't see that happening, it still gives me shivers to think about it. You can never be too sure about how much you know the people you know.

- >squeal like a little piglet and run off to sleep with mom
- >she told me to not worry about it, "barabashka" trying to play
- >she yelled some stuff and hugged me, I passed out

Little did I know, my mother was renting the flat for cheap because the old lady that had it died in the little bedroom. She was living there all alone and nobody discovered her body until nearly a month has passed. The relatives abandoned her. When she died, they came out of the woodwork and claimed title on the property, with my mother coming around at the right time she was able to rent the place out. That flat was really creepy though, I had a fishtank in the little bedroom, and every couple days a new fish would die. My mom would always feel like she needed to buy me new fish.

I was 17 and at my grandparents' lake house during late July. It's been around since the 1920s so it's pretty old. There isn't any air conditioning so on warm nights (like the one I am writing about), most of the windows were open. Generally it is quite peaceful and relaxed, and seeing as we were a bit secluded from the lake (the house is situated on the top of a hill in the woods), it's pretty quiet at night.

I was resting in bed just after the sun had set, reading something or other on my phone while the rest of my family was downstairs watching TV. I was pretty engrossed in what I was reading, so I didn't look up when I felt my sister walk into the room via the door on my right and pass over to her bed, which was on my left.

After a few minutes I looked up from my phone and noticed that it had grown very dark, which was compounded by the fact that I wasn't able to see too well because I'd been staring so intently at my phone. I looked over to see what my sister was doing, seeing as she was being so quiet, only to realize that she wasn't there. In disbelief, I stood up and turned my phone so that the screen lit up that side of the room. Nobody was there. I turned on the lamp to confirm that sure enough, my sister was not there and her bed was untouched. The only door to that room was on my right side, and I only felt her come in, never come out.

I asked her about it later and she claimed she had been downstairs all night, as did the rest of my family. But I'm so certain that someone walked into the room with me.

[619]

My aunt was head of housekeeping services for this really nice place in Greenwich Village in NYC. The family that lived there was upstate for the summer. I was tagging along for the day and playing with my cousin when we crossed by the toy room of the rich kids that lived there. We kind of peeked around to see all the neat stuff they had. Looking, but no touching unfortunately.

Then the strangest thing happened. There was an RC car in the corner of the room, and its antenna started slowly quivering. At this point we didn't really take more than a mental note of this because of hey! Awesome stuff in the room. Then the quivering became waving, into almost a violent whipping motion. The cousin and I were fixed there with a mixed feeling of fascination and horror for at least a good minute before we decided to book it out of there.

We both really didn't understand what was going on there, and years later, I still don't.

This happened just after my father's cremation.

- >Come home from the reception
- >Family with us. Some uncles, aunts and so on, my mother, my sister and me.
- >All head over to living room. House otherwise empty. No pets around.
- >Be catching up, talking and having some coffee
- >Checking out thunderstorm outside, started when he started sinking into the ground
- >Odd coincidence, didn't think much of it
- >Thunderclap followed by LOUD series of bangs, crashes, noises of breaking wood and shattering porcelain.
- >Run over to kitchen where noise came from
- >Kitchen is a complete ravage
- >Every wall-mounted cupboard, on both sides of the room, have been torn clean from the walls, lying on the ground shattered to pieces
- >Every plate, pot, glass whatever in the kitchen is lying on the ground in tiny fragments

>Pots smashed on the ground, appear to have bent after cabinets smashed into them.

>Literally no utensils, plates or whatever left. Pretty much only the windows and the oven were the only things not completely trashed. Have to buy new inventory at Ikea before we can eat.

Can't say it was something supernatural, I can just say it was weird.

For the sake of reference, at the time I lived in what was basically the middle of nowhere. The nearest house was about a mile down the road, I think, and I remember riding in my mom's car for 2-3 hours just to get to school every day. I have no idea why in the hell my parents wanted to live that far away from everything, especially considering that they had me and all.

Where I lived was in the range for black bears, but bears never really got out that close to the coast. It was also walking upright all the way across the field, which bears don't do. Closest I could guess is it was the size and shape of an upright grizzly bear, but those don't live in CA anymore. I've been by that field hundreds of times, and it's never been used for grazing cattle, and it's about twenty miles from the nearest town, so it wasn't some huge homeless guy.

Long story short....I don't know what it was.

Odd thing was, when we got back home, nobody said a thing about it. It just never got brought up. I asked my sister a couple years ago if she remembers, and she does, but we just never talked about it...

- >struggle for about 5 seconds
- >hand retreats
- >door shuts
- >lock it
- >stay in bathroom for hours screaming for the dog, my brother, or my parents to help me

This is a story my friend told me.

>family has had rural land for generations >nice big house with a barn >be 80s
>friend's uncle is watching the house for his parents alone
>he's sleeping
>he wakes up with sleep paralysis
>it doesn't go away
>he looks over outside the window >lights behind the barn >his door is opening

at this point my friend said the uncle described it as "a giant liquid metal snake". My friend says he imagines it as the metal tentacle thing in the basement from the war of the worlds.

- >snake thing comes in the room
- >moves to the side of the bed
- >opens its mouth thing
- >black void inside
- >uncle is so scared all he can think about is hitting this thing
- >when he imagines it the snake recoils
- >he keeps doing it
- >he keeps regaining little bits of control of his body
- >he visibly moves his shoulder
- >snake thing retreats
- >lights are gone in under 30 seconds
- >uncle keeps it quiet

At this point I was a skeptic, but there's more.

- >uncle drunk at a bar with his brother
- >decides to tell him the story
- >brother gets really mad and socks uncle in the face
- >is beating the teeth out of him calling him a liar
- >after they calm down, brother says the same thing happened to him

- >brother was watching the house with his friend
- >they were sleeping on the couch in the living room
- >brother wakes up with sleep paralysis
- >can see his friend
- >friend's eyes looks extremely scared
- >brother can see the barn
- >lights behind it
- >figure stands up and pushes its chest out
- >"eye" opens, blackness
- >snake slithers through the front door
- >brother is so scared he just wants to hit it
- >snake recoils

- >brother wiggles his toes, the snake retreats
- >lights gone

After that urbanization started and they haven't seen the snakes since then.

I'm skeptic about paranormal phenoma, but I've experienced very creepy things. Ironically, my two eeriest experiences both took place during All Saint's Day:

- >I burst into the bathroom hyperventilating and my dad comes out to see what's going on
- >It takes me some minutes to calm down and come to my senses
- >I return to bed, but I don't sleep a wink all night

I experienced the same kind of sudden night fright a couple of weeks ago, but this time I regained consciousness when I was just about to jump through the bathroom's window.

Here's the other experience.

- >Exactly a year after I was staying with a couple of friends in one of them's house, near the woody countryside (again, we don't celebrate Halloween here, so we were playing videogames and watching some trashy sci-fi show.)
- >we get bored so we decide to go for a walk and take our friend's dog with us. It's probably 2 AM
- >we get pass the house block and approach the forest path

>the iron gate in the front of the house is rattling as if blown by the wind, but the air is still >theheckisgoingon.jpeg
>the dog refuses to go further so we go back to my friends house and leave it there >we return to the forest path >as we are walking something jumps from the bushes >just a toad passing by >some minutes later we are alarmed by some grunts and shaking bushes a couple of >probably just a boar, but that freaks us up even more >our friend leads us to a place deep within the forest >the tree branches are entangled at the top forming some sort of tunnel, and a little stream flows by >there are a lot of fireflies on the place and frogs are croaking >it's beautiful
>all of the sudden we start to hear some low-pitched murmurs all around us

- >wake my mum
- >I'm panicking telling her what happened
- >sleep in my mums room that night

It still freaks me out to this day and I still get an odd feeling when ever I'm alone in the house, especially the living room and upstairs.

Here's my house if you want to do a bit of research on it, it's semi detached now but it use to be one big house. Google for some reason put the marker in the wrong place, it's the farm that's on the left.

A little while later my dog was in my mom's room at ~10pm and started growling at something that no one could see. For the past month or two I've also been hearing voices that I can't understand since it's going into an ear I don't hear too well out of.

Mine was scary at the time but is probably, in the grand scheme, pretty lame.

- >dog wakes me up at 2am
- >he's been sick so I've had to carry him up and down the stairs
- >figure he has to pee so whatever
- >he's whimpering and staring at the attic door next to my bed
- >awesome, probably squirrels again cuz I can hear the banging
- >pick up dog and start down stairs
- >something grabs my ponytail and yanks back hard enough that my feet go out from under me
- >lean back so I don't hurt the dog

- >legs tuck under me and I slide down the stairs, majorly scraping up my legs
- >dog whimper-growling at staring at top of stairs
- >look up at see my bedroom door slam hard
- >hear deep voice yell
- >nope-limp.png

I haven't had anything happen since and never had anything happen before so I don't know if I was just out of it and pissed the dog off by being a flailing moron but I was terrified at the time.

[658]

I have a couple nopes/ creepy happenings.

- >Be about 12
- >Aussie, 8:30 at night
- >It's summer, siblings are all in bed with lights off and fast asleep
- >Mum and her bf are in other end of our tiny lowerclass aussie home, watching TV
- >I have my own room, door was screwed and never closed properly
- >To make things even better, my pillows were facing my door, which was directly opposite the bathroom

- >3 to 5 meter's long and 2 meter wide crappy bathroom
- >Legit has a bath that takes up half of the room (just so you have a perspective)
- >Window above the sink, inline with the door
- >Previous tennants broke the window so it was stuck open 24/7
- >Brushing my teeth at the sink
- >Brushing away, me being 12 I was scared of the dark
- >Refuse to look up, kept looking at the sink
- >Spit out the toothpaste and look up out of habit from the mornings
- >My backyard is small, has a large tin shed in it
- >See a white figure floating about 30cm, infront of the shed
- >No feet, but has a head, arms, shoulders, neck, hair, face, torso.
- >The figure (looks male) doesnt rotate its head or arms or anything, stands there for a minute or so
- >hair on my necks standing up, too scared to move
- >The figure floats across the backyard and disappears

Couple months after, I went into the shed to help my mum's bf and I ask why a beam supporting the roof is missing, he said that a guy hung himself on it years and years ago and police removed it.

- >Few months later
- >same bed setup and room setup
- >mum got my door fixed and it shuts properly but still broken and hard to do
- >Mum makes sure its closed before I go to bed
- >trying to train me to sleep with light off and door closed like a big boy does
- >Can't sleep for ages
- >I could never fall asleep in that house for some reason, I guess I subconsciously knew something was wrong with it
- >Finally fall asleep at like 1am
- >Wake up a few hours later at like 3am or so
- >no idea why
- >I had just got out of sleeping with my head under the covers
- >Open my eyes and see a figure standing at the end of my bed
- >Freak out and pull the blanket over my head and curl into the fetal position and force my eyes closed

I have one more story of that house, and this is by far what scared me the most.

>About 14 or so

>same room, but share it with my bro who's 2 years younger

>Identical beds, opposite sides of the room, my bed's in the same spot as other stories, but moved downwards so I'm not looking into bathroom all night

>Desk set up between our beds with a TV and PS2

>Mum says she needs to go out to go shopping and we'll be right for an hour

>Hear the car leave

>We have 2 windows in our room, one looks to the front yard and the other is right above the gate to the backyard that we padlock shut with a padlock and chain whenever parents are out

>Look out window and see mum lock it before she leaves

>about 45 minutes later

>Door is slightly ajar, but not enough to see anything of the rest of the house, but mums room is next to ours and we can see if someone goes in there

>Playing Hitman on PS2, taking in turns

>Really old gate, the bottom of it grinds on the concrete and it makes a distinctive noise when its opening due to rusty joints

>Hear the gate open

>I drop the controller and we look at each other at the exact same time

>Know for a fact mum closed it with the padlock, we watched her

>We agree that mum didn't lock properly and a dog nudged it open

>Hear the back door open and slam closed

>freaking out 100000% and NOPE slam our bedroom door closed

>Every door makes noise when you open and close it due to old rundown house

>Hear paper rustling and crunching and being thrown around

>Only paper in the house is in mums room next to her computer and printer

>We had magazines in the kitchen which was right next to back door, but it didn't sound like that

- >Bro and I confused and terrified

- >Don't move for 20 minutes

- >Convince each other whatever it was is gone

- >Open the blind that's covering the window to the gate

- >See it's open and see chain and padlock on the ground intact

- >Mum gets home but neither of us have ever talked about the incident ever.

This happened to my dad:

- >Be about 3 or 4

- >In bed, shared room with my 2 older brothers

- >Mum is still awake, she leaves the door open and hallway light on

- >Roll over and open my eyes

- >See, what I can only describe as a human butterfly standing in the doorway, same height as it

- >Scream and run through it to mum and tell her

- >years later I forget about it and mum mentions to a friend and says it was probably an angel

This happened to a family friend, on my grandmothers' side of the family:

- >Family friend is recently married, she's going on a holiday with her new husband and 6 year old daughter to England

- >Few weeks in they go on a tour of this really old house

- >Really old house, like 16th or 17th century or something

- >The tour guide's family owns the house, his ancestors built it

- >He's giving them a tour

- >The little girl points to a wall and asks where the door went that used to be there

- >He says that there was never a door there

- >Tour goes on, again their daughter points out an area of the room and asked why the door moved, it used to be on the other wall

- >Again he says the same thing

- >After the tour he asks them to stay behind

- >He calls his father and asks him to find and bring over the original house plans
- >He comes over and they ask the little girl to describe the house and she knows it
- >As she describes it, the jaws of the father and son slowly reach the floor
- >She's describing every single detail of the house from the original plans
- >No way at all she could know all of this, let alone even one thing.

This happened to my father, last story

- >He was about 4 years old
- >In a car trip with his mum and 2 brothers
- >He randomly says "It's snowing where my other family lives"
- >His mum is really confused and asks what he means
- >He says that his nanny used to tell him that when it's snowing here, it's hot and sunny on the other side of the world (We're from Australia)
- >Grandma asked what else he remembers
- >He was a little girl, he died at about 6 or 7 years old
- >Old house, was wooden and he remembers it was snowing when he died
- >She asked him where he was
- >He says it was a rather big and knew country called "Amermca"
- >He's 4 and hasn't even started school yet, he couldn't have known this.

My dad had a really weird childhood. Apparently he used to talk in his sleep, as in, have full on coherent conversations with somebody who wasn't there.

But it wasn't in English. It was in no language spoken on this earth today. Clearly it was a real language and not English, but it was an intelligent language as comprehensible as English. I used to stay at his house and slept in his room and I would hear him speaking in it sometimes.

Feel free to add my OC to your collection. Would love for these stories to be told and immortalised. Never really told people before.

[665]

This happened to my dad when I was in my late teens. We lived in a small neighborhood on the outskirts of town, sort of dumpy but ok. My best friend lived two houses down, and the house that separated us was this huge clapboard monster in the middle of a huge creepy lot, overgrown with weeds and filled with cherub statues and the like.

Basically your quintessential haunted house scenario but it gets a bit better. The house was a favorite break-in spot for the neighborhood kids, it sat abandoned for as long as anyone I spoke to could remember, and was in all appearances abandoned hastily. The rumor was the only inhabitant died there and left no heirs, which appeared likely enough. The pantries were full of ancient gently rotting food and the place was full of furniture and artifacts. The place creeped me out pretty bad, but I never encountered anything ghostly myself, but there was this:

- >be my dad
- >be drinking keystones in the garage as night falls
- >gets it into his head to go explore the house, maybe take a couple souvenirs.
- >grabs a maglight, hops the fence, and breaks in
- >pokes around the ground floor for a bit, then works his way upstairs
- >upstairs is nothing but huge loft bedroom.
- >Four poster bed, vanity table, garbage.
- >Finds a couple of metal pitchers, could be tarnished silver. Snags them.
- >Faint noise from downstairs
- >Turn of maglight and freeze.
- >Noise stops. Could have been rats.
- >Time to leave, maglight on, moving in general direction of out
- >Noise returns, closer this time. Something moving his way.
- >Again, maglight off and freeze.
- >Again noise stops.
- >Def time to leave. Maglight back on and heading for the stairs
- >Noise is closer still, and indistinct voices could be heard.

- >Crap pants, turn off light, hit the brakes.
- >Noise stops.
- >wtf.dad
- >Voices coming from the staircase, close enough to be identified, but not understood- sounds like japanese
- >Enough is enough, run out of house like hair is on fire

Not much more to say, really. Dad returned to the garage with his prizes in tow (the pitchers) and presumably finished off his beer.

Cute story, but the interestingly vindicating part came a couple years later. My parents were considering buying that plot of land, tearing down the house and building something for themselves in its place. Never came to anything, but in researching who actually owned the property they found an interesting fact. The last person to live in that house did indeed die alone there, and, not even kidding, he was indeed totally Japanese. As for the pitchers, my brother took one of them to decorate his apartment after moving out, and claimed poltergeist activity connected to the relic until he disposed of it.

- >late one night, cousin falls asleep while I'm talking to him, he's on the top bunk
- >sister sleeping on bottom bunk, me on the floor
- >I'm laying there awake, both of them asleep
- >Then my cousin starts shifting in his bed, and climbs down the bunk ladder
- >he stands next to me while I'm laying there, I'm convinced he's screwing with me
- >'What are you doing, Anon?' I whisper, 'You're being weird dude,' I say
- >He starts walking at me, as if he wants to hurt me, I get up
- >I push him away, 'Stop it dude, this isn't funny.' I whisper shouted
- >He comes right back at me, faster now, I push him way harder (genuinely pissed off)
- >Still convinced he's just trying to be funny or some crap, tell him he's being an idiot
- >I climbed onto the bottom bunk where my sister was sleeping and hid between her and the wall
- >He reached over and tried to grab me so I shook him off and climbed back over her
- >He walked fast towards me, so I booted him in the chest, and he fell into the outlet-nightlight thing
- >look of pain on his face convinces me he's just screwing around
- >he climbs back up into bed and goes to sleep

>I lay there confused...

I talked to my cousin about this a the next day, totally denied it. Typical right? asked him about it years later, still denies any recollection of the event. I think, 'Wow he's really committed to this stupid joke.' A few weeks ago I visited my cousin again...

>(both of us are 19 years old now) and we (auntie, uncle, my mom, grandma and I) are sitting in the living room chatting.

>Auntie brings up how my cousin used to have some serious sleep walking issues when he was younger >mentions how she'd wake up and he'd be standing in the living room n' crap, just doing nothing...

>Then says, 'Oh tell Anon about what happened to you the other night!'

>cousin is hesitant, doesn't tell story.

>later that night him and I are reminiscing in his room, I bring up the 'story'

>he says, a few weeks ago he was sleeping, and was having this awful dream where this fricken creepy old man was chasing him and grabbing at his ankle >cousin keeps shaking the old guy off, but the guy's darn persistent >cousin wakes up, and is standing next to his bed facing the door and holding all of his blankets above his bed with one hand >cousin is absolutely stunned with fear

>after a few minutes of standing there, cousin NOPES back to bed >tells me how scared his still is of that...

Not sure what to make of that, or whether he was legitimately sleep walking when he attacked me that night when we were 8-10ish, but seriously. Wtf is up with that? Just glad none of that crap happens to me.

Gonna take time to describe this house a bit. As soon as you walk in you're in the living room. To your right is a hallway that splits like a T into a bathroom on the left at the end, the kid's room on the left side, and the master bedroom on the right at the end. And there was a rug in the hallway kinda showing the way to the rooms.

Might not be scary for you guys, but it definitely got me noping out.

So, a while ago I moved into a new place with my family, double-storey house, all the doors/walls are effectively soundproof and its dark as hell if you don't have any light sources.

So, I was just lazing about upstairs, since the family was out and I was home alone, and I could've sworn I could hear some really faint music and talking, despite the door being closed.

When I opened the door, the sounds stopped, and when I stood at the top of the staircase, nothing blatantly suspicious happened but the lights in my room started to flicker. As I'm the paranoid type who lets their imagination run wild, that was already freaking me out.

So I go back into the room, close the door and start playing some music. After a while I hear the talking again, it sounds angrier then before. I go out to the top of the staircase again and while I'm standing there the lights start flickering again, only this time I hear some loud bang come from downstairs. So at this point I just nope out, lock myself in the room, and barricade it with some shelves.

This was a little under a year ago, so I'm still in the same house, and I just cannot work up the nerve to go downstairs when the lights are out and nobody else is home. Darkness is never darker than when you're afraid of what might be in it.

- >tell my dad again to check downstairs, he could I tell I was pretty scared so he did
- >comes upstairs and says there was nothing
- >I went back to bed and only heard it for a few more minutes before it stopped

I still have no idea what that noise was. It's definitely one of the creepiest noise I've ever heard though. Not sure if that's creepy to anyone else, but it really scared me at the time, and still gives me shivers thinking about it.

I'm not really sure if this fits this thread I just want someone to tell me what it is. About 2 or 3 years ago I told /x/ I had a photo and couldn't work out what was in the background. I said I would post it if I ever came across it again and I finally did the other day. So I'm posting it.

This is from 2004, there was only those two (guy in the photo and guy taking the photo) there, it was about 1 in the morning so it was obviously dark, it's under a motorway/opposite a train track, they were there for well over an hour and never heard or saw anything when they were there and it wasn't until the pictures were uploaded to the computer did they notice the thing behind him. What is it?

That's all I want to know. I'm not saying it's something 5spooky, I'm just intrigued. The gap isn't big enough for someone to lie down in length ways, the concrete that comes down above the ledge only has a clearance of about 2 inches and the sections in between are about 4 feet high. It just seems to have a face but that could be the whole pareidolia thing. Whatever the it is, it's incredibly odd. Any ideas?

Have you ever seen shadow people? I've seen them a lot, mostly in my bad negative years growing up. I think mostly because I was looking for dark and negative things to be around me. But I will see them still every once in a while following me or watching me.

Well one night, I was sleeping on the couch rather than in my room. I could see them through the dark, so I would close my eyes just hoping they'd go away. But everytime I'd open them again they'd move closer to me. After 10 minutes or so of me being a scared I opened my eyes and there were two right above me, just watching me. One of their hands was moving towards me, and I closed my eyes pulling up the blanket over my head because I was scared witless. >.>

I stayed like that until my brother got home at 5 in the morning and turned the light on.

Honestly, I've never had much happen to me except when I was in this old house built back at the start of the 1900s. There was an old windmill out the front that had been moved there from an old mine. Used to make a terrible racket when it turned so we tied it up with rope. During the day it'd never make a noise but somehow still managed to make a clacking noise during the night. We just chalked it up to maybe the metal shrinking in the cool of the night.

Anyway, we renovated this house and my mother thought it'd be a fantastic idea to put glass doors everywhere so you could see out into the hallway. Of course, my bedroom happened to be one with glass doors. It didn't normally bother me, well, until one night when I was up reading a book and heard a weird noise. At first I thought it was the windmill but then I suddenly saw movement in the hallway. A man wearing old miner's clothes ran in front of my doors and out the front door of the hallway. A second later he was followed by a woman wearing some kind of old Victorian-style dress. She went out the front door too.

I got curtains put up in front of my doors after that.

We leave the shed and she tells me she used to have two dogs and they slept in the shed. One was really nice and one was insanely protective. And sure enough the growling came from the corner that the protective one slept in. I never believed in ghosts before that point so checked every other yard by her house for a dog, but I knew the whole time deep down by the way it sounded it came from in the shed. And there was nothing in there because I looked while the door was open when we were walking out.

>grab my keys, phone and my cat
>I climb out my window and drive my car to my gf's house and stay there for the night

I don't my know what the hell it was. My mom turned off her computer before she left. When I walked to the driveway I saw no indication of a break-in, though I didn't stick around for long. I also heard nothing before the scene played. When my parents arrived they found nothing out of place. I don't think it was a malfunction, I can't stop thinking what I would've seen downstairs if I hadn't noticed that my parents had left.

I've got some small stories about my best friend's house. It's pretty damn haunted.

>be younger me
>walking down hallway from bathroom to rejoin my friends in the kitchen

- >have to pass spare room, which seems to be the nerve center of activity

- >hear banging coming from WITHIN the spare room closet

- >NOPE.jpg down that hallway as fast as I can

A more recent one:

- >sleeping over for the first time in forever

- >standing at kitchen sink, looking out at backyard

- >feel a tingly sensation, like an animal with whiskers was standing there or someone had brushed their fingers on me while walking past

- >think "Oh, the dog must be sniffing me like an idiot."

- >turn and start saying "Misty, stop--"

- >no one there

- >dog is sleeping on the floor at the other end of the kitchen

She's also had Bibles thrown, objects have gone missing, and her dog, Misty, absolutely despises the spare room. Her late cat Mittie used to violently react to unseen forces before he passed.

[750]

- >In room

- >Hear front door open/close

- >Hear my mom talking to the dog

- >Get up and go out there to greet her

- >Open my door and immediately slam it back shut as I realize that my mom isn't even home yet

- >Was definitely my mom's voice

- >Dog is as confused as I am

Waited silently for a while. Pretty sure the skinwalker was doing the exact same thing just out of sight.

Forget living innawoods.

- >See burned out image of a demon/goblin type face flying towards me.

After that, lights went on, and ever since I can't sleep unless the sun comes up. This was five years ago, and I never spoke a word of it to anyone.

What gets me is shortly after, my mom would complain about me being too loud, despite being across the house. She'd text me saying to be quiet, but sometimes everyone, including me, would already be asleep, and my phone would wake me up. I tried to tell her, but she insisted she could "hear talking"...

We were in Waxahachi Texas at a restaurant called the Cat Fish Plantation. It was about a week before Halloween 2013, so not very long ago.

The house is old victorian style and reportedly has several ghosts that used to be former occupants. Anyways we sat down at the table with my wife who was sitting across from me. There was nothing behind her but the wall. While we were waiting for food it felt like someone was trying to push in her chair. It lasted fairly briefly, but she could feel her being pushed forward along with the chair.

It didn't happen to me personally, but I believe her. I have never had an experience like that and neither has she.

Not really that spectacular, but here goes.

I've always had a thing with seeing faces. Most of the time I just see a white-ish blob with two darker holes in the corner of my eyes. This happened too often to be a coincidence. There's also this thing where if you start thinking about entities and spirits, talking about them or searching them, you'll attract them. I think some of you can relate.

Bit of backstory first. Right about the time my older sister was born (she's three years older than me) my parents started building a house. Six months after sis is born the house is finished and they move in. They live in the house from then until I was six years old.

Then we moved to Iowa for my dad's job. When we moved my uncle and his girlfriend moved in. When I was 11, the company dad worked for went belly up so we moved back to the old house. Uncle still lived there and stayed with us until I was 14. And now, story time.

- >Be 12 years old
- >About a week into summer vacation
- >Parents and uncle at work, sis is with her friends
- >Home alone
- >Nothing on TV except soap operas
- >Forget this I'm gonna watch a movie

- >Some girl is sitting on the bed
- >Kinda surprised but not really

- >We exchange "Hi"s
- >Tell her I'll be in the living room
- >She says ok and I walk off to watch my movie

- >15 minutes later she comes into the living room
- >Says she's leaving, comes over and motions for a hug
- >Think it's weird but oblige, uncle's girls are normally pretty nice
- >Heads towards the backdoor
- >I say bye, attention still mostly on movie
- >About 30 minutes later
- >I never heard that girl come in
- >Never heard the backdoor open or close when she left
- >NOPE to my room and wait for someone to get home
- >First one to get home is uncle
- >Got some questions for you
- >Ask him who she was and he asks me to describe her.
- >Kinda short, mid length black hair, pale and, looking back, pretty cute.
- >Turns out this girl's name was Liz
- >She was my uncle's girlfriend, and lived with him when we lived in Iowa.
- >And, as cliché as it sounds, she died during this time (not in the house though, car accident in town).
- >Apparently liked hearing about how me and my sister were doing and wanted to meet us at some point

Still live in that house and have since moved into my uncle's old room. Haven't ever seen her again but the room does have a different feel than the rest of the house. I like to think she's still here and every once in a while I talk out loud to aunt Liz, just in case she is there.

Sorry if it's not as NOPE as some others but it's the only experience I've ever had.

*****

- >freezing and shivering from anxiety and temperature
- >nearly piss myself and can still feel my heart exploding in my ribcage
- >can't move anymore

To this day I don't know why I did that or what happened. I blame it on sleep walking, but I remember it just like yesterday, so I was conscious. It was really odd and scary.

I remember locking all the doors to the house the night before going to bed. We ended up sharing strange stuff that had happened during the years.

Overall it was a pretty OK day, it kind of traumatized me but I have honestly no idea what happened or if anyone went in the house.

Grandma liked it because it was from the 1800's or whatever. Old people like old stuff. She refused to get rid of it, until she was in the kitchen making food one day and heard crying and child laughter in the basement. She sold it in a yard sale after that.

My mom was happy to hear it. I'm just wondering where it went.

>Don't turn on lights because I'm dumb.

Now, a little backstory. Everywhere I have lived this type of stuff happens. So you know, they're following me, etc.

They always have a point of entry/portal/area they retreat to type of thing that, when you pass it, you know you're being watched. In this house, it was a giant window with no blinds/drapes that didn't open. The room it was in wasn't closed off, it just had this weird round about thing connecting it to the kitchen and living room. So basically no doors.

[843]

This had happened to 2 uncles and my dad.

Backstory:There's this house up in the hills where I go shooting, it's an old farm house and my dad and grandfather used to go up there.The man inside would tell them of old I.R.A. soldiers ghost looking in the windows at him.

- >mid 70's
- >one of my uncles was coming from the beach and the other from the village back to my granda's house
- >my dad was looking out the window
- >all of a sudden a light shoots up from that house in the hills
- >all 3 of them saw it shoot up
- >more recently my dad described it as "rolling around the hills"
- >anyway it shot up into the sky and vanished!

The guy who lived there was found dead in the morning.

My story:

- >be 4 weeks ago
- >walking back that road one night coming from my nan's house with dad
- >going home
- >dad freezes
- >looks at the hill
- >ball of light was floating there
- >dad told me not to look at it
- >keep on walking
- >look back at it and it disappeared.

BTW the ball of light was a good 900metres south from nan's house.

I know of a few more spooky things from the village.
Since it's Ireland, there's a lot of old monastaries and ring forts.

- >So theres this place in the village called the new line
- >it was just a road crossing through a field so it was easier to get around
- >I've heard of people saying that they have fallen off their bikes there and been aproached by an old lady
- >the lady is all grey and doesn't speak a word
- >I believe (I cannot clarify this) she is the lady who committed suicide by jumping off of one of the nearby monastaries

She is seen twice.

- 1)Jumping off that monastary on a late November night
- 2)She is seen down the new line when you fall off your bike

I've seen her jump off the monastary with a blue-ish glow.

This is a story my mom's father once told her:

- >1922
- >IRA prepping to fight the government troops in the civil war
- >grandfather was walking home one night when he spots a light inside a tomb
- >opens the graveyard gate

>looks through the tomb and there was 3 IRA men loading munitions and weapons into the tomb

Not scary, but I heard that the men were cursed when they disrupted the dead's sleep.

Finally:

>be shooting rabbits back at those hills where my uncles saw that light

>see fox running on the beach

>I wanna bag him

>look through binoculars first

>no fox

>there was a shadow of the fox running >hear a scream of a young child

>nope

- >Go upstairs, nothing up there.
- >NOPE

That dog never ever slept in my parent's room again. He use to sleep there every night before then. After that night, he could not stay in my parents room for more than a few minutes.

After the dog incident, we began to routinely hear loud footsteps coming from my parents room. Even when no one was home. This happens to this day and will happen throughout the day. Morning, Day, Night--it doesn't matter. We have heard it at all times in all environments, often more than one person will hear the same thing at the same time. I've had my wife, my friends, my family's friends, even contractors hear the footsteps. These are loud footsteps too, like someone is stomping the crap out of the floor.

This is happening right now. It's actually starting to get louder, and it originally seemed to be coming from one wall, but now I hear it on two other walls. The room I'm in is a corner of the house, so it's coming from outside. There's a window and the shades are drawn. I'm a little scared of what I might see if I open it.

Other than that, and this general creepy vibe of constantly being watched, it's been pretty quiet and I've had people over to keep me company. Two days ago the dishwasher started on its own, but they're coming home soon.

[892]

Back in the sixth grade I hung out with this kid who was into heavy metal and horror. There was an old abandoned house across the street from my neighborhood and my friend wanted to explore it--didn't see that one coming (sarcasm). Anyways, I wasn't really hesitant at all about exploring it and agreed to do so. We visited the house many times, nothing out of the ordinary--just a couple of mold corroded TV sets, worn down walls, the usual you'd expect in a house that's been empty for what seemed to be decades.

Anyways, we decided to visit the house one night several years later--don't remember the time, but it was dark out--again nothing scary or creepy happened and we ended up touring it for 15 minutes before leaving and heading home.

Couple days later at school, another friend of mine was showing a couple of people pictures on his phone. Ofc, I was curious and asked what he had on it. Turns out he had a picture of a faint skull peering out through the cracks of a deteriorated wall. Apparently, he had told me he visited an old house that happened to be along the same road as the house I had visited a couple days prior. Long story short, he took a picture of the house's interior and that skull hadn't appeared until after the picture was taken. Brings me chills to this day. Idk if that house is haunted or not, but I'd rather not find out...

There is all kinds of folklore among students about how various strange things came to be, but we have still not figured out where the mutilated doll photos came from. A few years ago I would've assumed they were put there to mess with people, but I've met so many crazy people around here in the intervening time that gradually the severely mentally ill individual hypothesis came to seem less impossible.

There's some other weird stuff around campus, but that one wins for sheer ability to make me question the fabric of reality. Most are only spooky because of the threat of cops and the filth and seclusion and darkness, and the occasional danger of severe bodily harm.

My friend and I once found this abandoned victorian house. We went in with six people and found this room that was just filled with nothing but ropes hanging from the ceiling. There were so many you had to actually wade through them, and couldn't see the other side of the room.

That in itself was slightly eerie, but the bit that got me was when they started all swaying at once. It wasn't like a breeze, it was more a rythmic, circular motion.

Our family has a trailer at a country club out of town. At midnight one night my brother rode his bike to the "good bathrooms" (either use the porta-potties near our trailer, or take a 3 minute bike ride to the real bathrooms).

Anyways, he went in to crap and didn't think anyone was in there because it was so quiet. After a few minutes he hears rustling from a paper bag and heavy breathing from the shower stall beside his toilet stall. He can't crap anymore because he's scared, so he waits 5 minutes for the guy to leave before he bolts and comes back to our trailer. My dad went with him an hour later and the shower was still locked.

My grandma told me this about a week after it happened to her. She was home by herself one night while my grandpa was at a Wednesday night bible study at their church and he wasn't expected home until about 10 PM. My grandparents' house is set up where if you're in the living room looking at the TV, you can see the dinner table and the back door off to the right in the kitchen. Their backyard doesn't have a fence, just leads into a big field of grass before running into a forest.

She was sitting in her recliner watching TV about 9 PM and suddenly hears very loud footsteps coming up the porch steps that leads to the back door. She froze and kept her gaze on the TV, pretending she didn't hear anything in case this person could see her. She keeps the same position for about 10 minutes after not hearing anything and finally built up the courage to get up and look.

She turns on the porch light and quickly glances out and doesn't see anything. She didn't hear any footsteps walking back down so she calls my grandpa and tells him what's happening and he made his way home. He goes out the front door and walks around the perimeter of the house and finds no one.

The next morning they walked around a second time since it was now light out. They go up to the porch and find a hatchet in the very corner. After my grandpa quickly realized he doesn't own a hatchet, a day or two later he invested in a Remington.

There's an abandoned school not far from my area that subsequently turned into a nightclub then became abandoned, again. Thankfully it's still standing in pretty good shape.

It's known to be very haunted. Many people including myself have heard kids laughing, talking...etc.

I went about 10 years ago with a group of 2 friends, so 3 of us. Anyways, nobody else was near there and we kept on hearing laughing and saw a few small shadows dart out in front of us and at one point saw what appeared to be a kid sitting on a tree branch watching us.

Pic related circa 1915:

- >Park on the side of the road outside his place
- >Two sketchy looking native americans walking by
- >We plan on staying in the car until they pass, because they will almost certainly try to start something with us or ask us for change/smokes

- >It's a man and a woman, 40-50 years old
- >When they get parallel to my car, both stop dead in their tracks without turning their heads towards us
- >Woman turns, starts walking towards my car
- >Stares into my eyes, with the most dead-faced look I have ever seen in my life
- >Absolutely no emotion, blank, cold, dead eyes
- >Reaches for my door handle and tries to open my door
- >Quickly lock it before she reaches it
- >Tries a couple more times, all while staring into my eyes, expression (or lack thereof) staying the same
- >I say "Can I help you?"
- >Says nothing, keeps staring at me for a few seconds
- >Turns around and starts walking away with man

Normally, I would think they were just on drugs, but this was the most horrifying expression I have ever seen. It was like she was just a shell of a human being, a walking body with no soul or life inside of her. I will never, ever forget her face, I know this story probably doesn't sound too scary when it's typed out, but I am covered in goosebumps just thinking about it.

Does anybody have any idea what that could have been about? It truly was not HUMAN behaviour, I'm sure she had something wrong with her, spiritually.

Some other weird things have happened since then. A crow flew out of the basement at my little brother at some point.

A friend of mine lives across the street from a large wooded park (less than 6 blocks from my house) and he very recently told me that he and his fiancée had been drawn into the woods by a strange drumming sound, and while they've never been able to find the source of the sound, he did say that they've had at least one bizarre encounter in the woods. I don't know the details though.

It should also be mentioned that I have told precious few people of the drumming or the glowing mass in my house before now.

[940]

My old bedroom in my parents' house gives off some pretty peculiar vibes.

It's just a normal, relatively clean and organized room, covered in movie posters and packed full of cloths. My sisters, both in the past and recently, have tried at one point or another to sleep in there but were "too creeped out" to last the night. My mom doesn't like to be in there alone, says she feels like she's being watched. A cousin once said that she was afraid to sleep in the bed because she felt as though she would open her eyes to see someone standing at the foot of the bed in the middle of the night.

Anyway:

- >Christmas break 2009, I'm home for winter holiday
- >laying on my back in bed, talking to boyfriend at the time on the phone
- >around 2am, getting ready to say goodnight
- >sharp jab between shoulders
- >not too painful but awfully surprising
- >lay there in silence, bf asks what's wrong
- >another jab, same place on my back. The mattress lifts slightly off the bed from the impact.
- >jump off bed like a startled gazelle and run down the stairs, almost in tears
- >don't sleep in my room for the rest of winter vacation

That was odd. This was really the only "paranormal" event I witnessed in the house. Other family members had creepier experiences, which I had chalked up to them being paranoid pussies until that night. We eventually had the house blessed.

I have a very irrational fear of things in the distance standing still, only to suddenly move in an explosion of speed. One of the worst sensations for me is when I look at something far away in the dark, not complete darkness mind you, but that one where you can make things out. Been going to that house for 16 years straight now. It only started up around 9 or so years back, which really creeps me out, because roughly 10 years ago some guy burnt the house next door down, burning the family that lived there alive.

When we were kids, me and my friends would lay stomach down on our skateboards, and go through the drainage system of our very large neighborhood. When I was 9 or 10, I had my bed in one small corner of my room, where I had enough space to fit my bed, a nightstand, and a Tv in front of my bed. And being little, and scared of the dark from past experiences, I had a night light right next to my bed to give me some comfort.

Well, on this night, I was getting all ready for bed, and laid down. I lean off of my bed and turn my night light on, and as I was doing so, I hear something from behind my bed. Scared witless, I didn't turn around, instead I leaned back onto my bed, and sunk into my blankets to try and hide. I look up and can see behind my bed with the screen of my Tv, because I had the night light on right next to it. And I shit you not, I see a very tall man walk behind my bed, carrying a very large bag or something. I had a dresser right behind my bed, so all I saw was him walk over behind my bed, and duck in front the dresser very slowly. I just stared at my Tv until I fell asleep waiting to see if he got up or anything.

Probably one of the most scary things I've ever seen. And for months after that, whenever I'd put my head near the wall my bed was leaning against, all I would hear is blood curdling screams, like some woman outside was being tortured to death, and that was also terrifying. I've never had a revisit from the tall guy, and the screams have subsided, but that was scary.

I was at home with my little brother Andrew and my neighbor Scott. My parents were away at a wedding and we had the house to ourselves. Playing video games in the basement, being loud, and breaking rules because we could. After a good chunk of time we ran upstairs to get some junk to snack on and keep our sugar highs going. While in the kitchen we all heard a loud slam. SLAM!, It happened again. It was coming form upstairs, it sounded like someone was slamming a door shut. SLAM!. We decided to investigate. I went upstairs and all the doors were closed. I opened each one, gave the room a look, and left the room, each time closing the door behind me.

Nothing...We went back downstairs to the kitchen. We gathered our things ready to through this off as a fluke when suddenly

SLAM!

All the doors upstairs were shut, and after checking again they all remained shut. Something was opening up doors and slamming them shut...

This is the first of two instances. First, I was alone in the basement, playing GTA IV with my friend on my PC. It gets to about 1 AM and we're having a blast, shooting RPGS and throwing grenades willy nilly. Then I hear a sound that really doesn't fit with GTA. I figure it's not coming from my headset, so I take it off. The sound that's being made is coming from a century old music box that we have. The last time it was used was probably 10 years ago. And this thing is just full on blaring its song. I start chanting "NO NO NO NO NO" and book it upstairs, leaving my friend on Skype pretty confused. My mom and dad are coming down from their room, my dad equipped with a baseball bat. As you can imagine, it was hard to explain to them that it was NOT an intruder.

My second instance was in the same basement. Now, my basement has a main area where most of our furnishings are, and a satellite room off of that. Then, there's the unfinished part of the basement where I'm sure the spirits dwell, but I digress (I'll post pics of the basement if this gets popular). Anyway, this time I'm playing GTA IV again with the same friend. It's about 1 AM again, and we decide to call it a night. I'm browsing Reddit while I cool down from vidya gaems with my headset off to let my ears take a break. It's at that point that I hear "Da da da daaaaaa daaaaaaa" (read with two little girl voices) from the bowels of the unfinished part of the basement. Now, it's pitch black around me except for my island of salvation at my computer. At this point, I'm just so done with ghosts that I say, "Forget it, fine, have the basement" and go upstairs and go to bed.

I moved into my current house two years ago. After about a week, I found myself there alone for the first time after dark. A few weird, unsettling things happened. Like going out to the back porch to take out trash, coming back and finding the storm door locked from the inside. That sketched me out a little bit and had me on edge, but I walked around to get in through the front door.

Later I was washing dishes at the sink; the stairs down to the basement are visible from the kitchen sink, and I had this uncanny feeling that someone was at the bottom of the stairs, looking at me. I ended up walking backwards... and stepped barefoot on a loose piece of trim that had been previously found, and set aside, and was not where I had put it before. A finishing nail went about half an inch through my heel.

That did it. I got out of the house just to walk and calm my nerves, and really, since then, I haven't had anything like that feeling.

This happened when I was about 9. Basically I used to have a large basket in my bedroom full of old toys I didn't play with anymore (like toy dogs, monkeys, Toy Story characters etc.) and it was absolutely full to the brim with these old toys. One evening I was in my room getting in bed, I switch the light off and hear some messed up Joker laugh from the toy basket.

I think I'm probably just imagining things so just ignore it. Then I hear another laugh. WTF. I turn the light on and spend a good 5 minutes staring at the toy basket waiting for weird shit to happen. Nothing.

Then suddenly I hear the creepiest thing from the basket: "I'm still heeeeeerrreeeee"

I turn the light on and creep toward the basket. This could be one of atleast 50 toys. I quickly sift through the basket but find nothing and give up.

Then, as I'm walking away I hear "HEY, YOU, LOOK AT ME"

I freak out. Turns out it was an old purple monkey toy and its batteries were fading so it was malfunctioning.

About 4 years ago I lived in this creepy 70's era house in the downtown area of town. My cousin came over from Ontario and he needed a place to stay for a couple of nights so we let him sleep in one of our guest bedrooms. We had about 3 extra bedrooms, but we were going through some reno's so he had to stay in this creepy bright baby blue room right beside mine. He slept on a mattress, not a bed.

Sometime during the night he burst into my room shivering and in a cold sweat, He looked terrified. He just crumpled onto the floor and lay there. I don't know if he slept at all.

Fast forward a year, some friends and I are having a sleep over and I tell them the cousin story, one of my friends comes up with the bright Idea to try and sleep in the blue room. So when the time came we all piled onto the queen sized mattress and eventually all fell asleep.

I awoke to the feeling of worms crawling all over me, both my friends were gone and the door out of the Blue Room was closed, I started thrashing around wildly, then I started gagging. It felt like works where squirming out of my every orifice. I got up and searched for the door knob. I couldn't find it. I looked for the light switch, BAM! Let there be light. All of the squirming ceased and I looked around for a few nanoseconds, there was no worms in sight, then I dashed out the door scared witless only to meet up face to face with my two friends. They asked me what happened and I summed it up, they said they basically had the same experience.

Fast forward again another week, I walk into the Blue Room and the floor is literally covered in worms.

When I was about 16, I was walking upstairs in my parents house, and in my peripheral vision, I thought I saw my little brother going into my room. My room was at the end of a hallway at the top of the stairs, and as youre walking up you can see my room to the right.

As I walk into my room, I say, "Danny get out of my room," expecting him to be messing around in there. No one's there. I lay down on my bed and close my eyes for a second, and when I open them again, I see this tall person, in a robe type thing that looked like a bunch of dirty black roughly woven rags sewn together. He is very pale and gaunt, with long black hair, and he is basically standing right on my chest, looking straight down at me.

I didnt scream or move, just shut my eyes again quickly, and when I opened my eyes again he was gone.

Another time in the same house, I was sleeping, and the phone rang. It woke me up, but I let it ring for a while thinking one of my parents would pick up. This was probably one or two in the morning. I finally pick up the phone and groggily say "hello..." and I hear some lady on the line, sobbing. Then her tone of voice changes, like shes angry all of a sudden, and she says what sounded like, "I'm going to cut my toe off..."

I freaked out, slammed the phone down, and didnt sleep the rest of the night.

I have a sink / mirror setup in my room across from my bed. It's odd, but I never paid it much mind because the room is a converted attic. I occasionally get creepy vibes, but nothing more than what I imagine most people get in the dark.

Whenever I wake up in the middle of the night to make water, I'd usually just do my business in the sink and rinse it, being too lazy to go downstairs. A couple nights ago, I got creeped out by my own silhouette in the mirror at 4am while pissing, but stared at it anyway because that's how I deal with my fears.

I'm a pretty sound sleeper, and went back to bed no problem. It wasn't till the morning that I remembered that I've had a buzzcut for a month now. My silhouette had my old hair.

Some background info: Some odd months ago there was a wreck on the highway in front of my apartment complex. I was at school, then work the whole day from 8AM to about midnight, so I never saw anything, my neighbor told me when he saw me smoking my last cig of the night. He just said it was a pretty bad one, that a semi merged into someone.

In my complex, there's a ton of kids. and an ice cream truck comes by starting in mid to late April all the way through mid to late November, if weather permits. It always used to swing by around anywhere between 5PM to 6PM (at least during the summer when I'm here at that time, it might change during the semester). It also swings by twice on the weekend.

- >assume I'm just tired and must have the song stuck in my head from the little bit I heard earlier
- >done with project by 6AM, have to get ready for class at 8, so I just kill time
- >my neighbor, who has a kid that goes to kindergarten at 8, knocks on my door lightly at about 7:15
- >"Did you hear the ice cream truck pass by at 3 last night?"
- >totally did, actually, I was awake, blah blah blah
- >says his kid woke him up because the music was loud

- >tell him I just heard something faint, like it was across the complex or on the highway
- >he blows it off, saying his kid has been hassling him almost every night about one thing or another and it's just her way of trying to sleep with mommy and daddy (his GFs pregnant again, so his kid has to sleep alone since her prego belly gets in the way)
- >uneventful day for me, classes, work, home
- >around 2AM, getting ready for bed and I hear the ice cream truck music
- >open my front door and listen outside, but it's still really faint
- >whatevs, go to bed, sleep until 7

This goes on for a week. Every night between 2AM and 4AM I hear a faint ice cream truck. My neighbor looks completely drained every morning and he always says his kid wakes him up and complains about the ice cream truck.

- >one night I hear the music
- >much louder than before
- >Stoked because if the truck is actually there, I want some ice cream. I need to step away from things for a bit
- >start running outside and I can see the truck
- >it's playing that "lullaby and goodnight" song
- >ask for the ninja turtle ice cream, hand him a fiver
- >he tells me he doesn't have it
- >ask for a ton more, all of them he keeps saying are gone
- >wtf stop driving through here if you have no ice cream
- >I wake up the next morning (Saturday) and here the ice cream truck rollin' through
- >don't even want it anymore, besides all those kids, mang, not about that life
- >laying in bed for about 10 minutes, just trying to wake up
- >thinking about that crappy nighttime ice cream truck
- >every night I heard it, it was playing "Lullaby", never the songs this truck plays
- >Actually, ice cream truck always plays a lot of songs that never last more than 15 seconds
- >My Darlin' Clementine, We Wish You a Merry Christmas, Old McDonald, Lullaby, You are My Sunshine, then repeats.

>neighbor sees me step out for a cig, he comes out and asks to bum one >tells me he's really stressed about his daughter, wonders if she thinks they'll love her less when the baby comes, etc.
>I tell him I saw the ice cream truck and it might be she's just got super hearing or something >explain the truck had no ice cream and it pissed me off >my neighbor's laughing with me and then tells me I must've been having a waking dream, because he was trying to get his daughter back sleep when he saw me out of her window standing in the parking lot in my jammies
>Well, yeah. I wanted ice cream. Nobody gotta get dressed for ice cream.
>He keeps laughing about it, then says
>"I can understand why Melly's upset, since we drove past the wreck, but you just heard about and wish it didn't happen?"
>nervous laughter, tell him I'm still a little groggy, ask what wreck
> "The wreck on the highway like a month ago. The ice cream truck was trying to turn into the complex, but the semi took it out. There were ice cream packages everywhere and the driver was smeared on the pavement. I thought I'd have to get Melly counseling, she was freaking out."
>mfw we're haunted by a useless ice cream truck
